RESPONSE TO NOTICE OF DRAWING INCONSISTENCY

Dear Sir:

Responsive to the Notice of Drawing Inconsistency with Specification (copy attached), mailed March 12, 2007, Applicants submit the attached Substitute Page 3 of the Specification to correct an error in Paragraph [0019], specifically, "FIGURES 17-20 . . ." should read, "FIGURES 16-20 . . ."

This change to the Specification is made to correct a typographical error prior to the issuance of the patent.

The issue fee pertaining to the present application has not yet been paid.

No additional fee is believed to be required for this Resposne. However, the undersigned attorney of record hereby authorizes the charging of any necessary fees, other than the issue fee, to Xerox Deposit Account No. 24-0037.

In the event the Examiner considers personal contact advantageous to the disposition of this case, he/she is hereby authorized to call Mark S. Svat, at Telephone Number (216) 861-5582.

Respectfully submitted,

FAY SHARPE LLP

Detailed Description of Preferred Embodiments

[0015] Languages, whether they are of the written or spoken variety, are the main communication tool used by humans. However, as is well known, different languages have developed over the millenniums for specific groups. Each of these languages have particularities unique to the understanding of those persons within a group allowing for knowledge to be passed between and shared among those members. While each of these languages do have their unique characteristics, there are some basic coincidences between numerous languages dependent upon their evolution within time and geography. Basically, any language may be separated into its simplest elements, even for the most complex constructions. For example, as a very basic point, western languages base their structures on three common elements, of a subject, verb and object. For example:

SUBJECT	VERB	OBJECT
El Proceso	es	muy aburrido
O Processo	é	muito aborrecido
Il Processo	e'	molto noiso
Le Procés	est	vrai enneuyeux
The Process	is	so boring
De Proces	is	zeer vervelend
Die Verzapfungmethode	ist	sehr langweilig
